SETTLEMENT OF REPARATIONS AND EVACUATION OF GERMAN RUHR BY FRANCE HOPED FOR

For First Time Since Invasion Feeling Lingers at Washington That Adjustment of Europe's Chief Difficulty Is Soon to Be Attempted in Sincerity—Politics May Thwart Heroic Efforts of Proposed Commission

WASHINGTON, Oct 27—For the first time since France entered the Ruhr, thus planting her foot firmly on Germany's industrial neck, there appeared genuine confidence among American government officials today that the reparations deadlock and resultant turmoil is due to end in the very near future.

France's conditional acceptance of the plan put forward by Secretary of State Hughes is not satisfactory to officials of this government. They would have preferred that Premier Poincare accept the Hughes plan outright with no strings attached. Nevertheless, they feel that a half loaf is better than none at all, and they are confident that nothing but good can result from the present negotiations.

A long and perhaps torturous path lies ahead of the advisory commission of experts that is to be appointed to examine into Germany's ability to pay. It is not doubted that the commission will be beset by Franco-German politics at every turn, or that the findings of the commission will be hotly protested by one or more of the principals to the controversy.

"The important thing to remember is that a start has been made," said an administration spokesman today. "The difficulties, of course are enormous, but it is not believed they are insurmountable, and certainly there will be a clarification of the situation, whatever else results."

What France has accepted differs radically from what Secretary of State Hughes proposed.

The Hughes plan embraced the appointment by each of the governments concerned, including Germany, of recognized financial and economic experts to conduct an exhaustive inquiry into German resources, and recommend a fixed amount of reparations and a plan of payment. It was Hughes' idea that the commission would be composed of scientists and not politicians.

France has agreed to accept the commission idea, but the reparations commission itself is to select the members, guide their deliberations and generally control the

Gaston B. Means Held in Liquor Plot

Gaston B. Means.

Gaston B. Means, former special investigator of the Department of Justice, secretly indicted by a Federal Grand Jury, with Elmer W. Jarnecke, his secreary, has been held in $15,000 bail in New York City on charges of conspiracy to violate the prohibition laws. The charge may also involve internal revenue and postal violations. Federal officials assert Means was behind one of the biggest liquor plots yet unearthed. Means was tried and acquitted in 1917 for the alleged murder of Mrs. Maude C. King, whose confidential adviser he was. He later lost a fight for her $2,000,000 estate.

OIL MAGNATE SAYS STOKES' CHARGES ARE UNFOUNDED

Met Mrs. Stokes But Three Times Says Wallace On Stand

NEW YORK, Oct. 27. — "The man in the case" held the center of the stage Friday in the sensational divorce drama of Stokes vs. Stokes.

Edgar T. Wallace, San Francisco oil man, named by William Earl Dodge Stokes as the principal co-respondent of the two score of witnesses with whom he linked his wife's name, took the witness stand this afternoon.

The 72-year-old millionaire has charged that Wallace entertained his beautiful young wife, Helen Elwood Stokes, in his apartment on Fifth Avenue and accompanied her on week-end visits to Connecticut country estates.

He intimated Wallace and his wife had been intimate for nearly 20 years, introducing testimony to show that in 1904 Helen Elwood, the young girl then in her teens visited Wallace at his home in Missouri.

Wallace plunged into his story.

"I knew Mrs. Stokes—met her in 1908 at San Francisco, at the Palace hotel," he testified. She was unmarried then.

"Never knew her at her mother's home in Denver about 1909 and when she visited New York with her mother later I met her again.

"I never saw her after that until this case was first called for trial in 1921.

"I never met her any place any time after she married Stokes. She never visited Bethel, Conn., or any other place with me.

"There never was any love affair

HOME ECONOMICS COURSE PAYS BIG SAYS DEAN KNAPP

Syracuse Teacher Is Warm In Praise Of Training Given

HELPS THE WIFE

Work Respected and Scholastic Standard Kept High

(By CHESTER B. BAHN)

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 27.—Education of girls today does pay. From the points of view of the young women, the parents and the commonwealth, it is a good economic investment, according to Mrs. Florence E. S. Knapp, dean of the College of Home Economics, Syracuse University, who has the instruction of 400 prospective wives under her wing.

"With the increasing problems of the home, with its cramped quarters, kitchenette and one woman domestic affairs, it has devolved upon the colleges to instruct the daughters in the home how to cook, sew and tend the house," she said.

"Many mothers come to me every week to explain that they have not the time or room to give their girls proper training to become the wives and mothers they eventually will. The College of Home Economics is prepared to meet this need.

"It is not a question of what a young woman can do when she graduates from the domestic science department. The coeds solve that themselves, because there are few of them left unmarried a year after graduation.

"No matter where a girl comes from, whether her parents be poor or wealthy—and we have both classes—it pays immensely for her to go to college. Those who do not

AMBASSADOR HAS GRAVE FEARS FOR GERMANY'S FUTURE

NEW PORK, Oct 27—"There is no danger of a monarchy starting in Germany—the republic is well grounded and will stand," declared Dr. Otto Wiedfeldt, German ambassador to the United States who arrived here from Europe today.

"The separatist movement has no chance of success in Germany," he continued. "Stresemann will not be overthrown and his government will hold fast for some time to come.

"I do not think there will be any German loan attempted until after the reparations questions is settled. A German loan will depend upon the good will of the American bankers after all."

Dr. Wiedfeldt said he was bringing back with him the commercial treaty between the United States and Germany drawn up by the American state department.

"I think it a very satisfactory to Germany," he said.

The German statesman painted a gloomy picture of conditions in Germany

"That there is much unrest now all over Germany is not astonishing," he said. "It is the natural consequence of the Ver-

KNIGHT SCORCHES TAFT AND ALBAUGH AMENDMENTS OVER FLAME OF BITTER SARCASM

CLEVELAND, Oct. 27 - Under the Taft laws which will be voted on at a referendum by the people of Ohio at the fall election, "untimed sums of money are to be raised and the tax spenders can go as far as they like," Charles L. Knight, of Akron, publisher of the Akron Beacon-Journal, and former congressman from the fourteenth district, told the Civitan club here today, in a speech in which he advocated the defeat of the Taft and Albaugh laws, ridiculed the state laws, ridiculed the state Republican organization for its support of these measures, and took a shot at Governor Donahey and the Democrat party for doing nothing to defeat them at the polls.

Mr. Knight said in part:

"I propose to try the Taft bill upon what its text says and the interpretations placed upon it by its author. The bill abolishes the so-called Smith one per cent law, under which now can be levied 15 mills and out of which must be paid running expenses, interest and sinking fund charges. The Taft bill raises the rate to 17 mills interest and sinking fund charges, which by the way, are made retroactive are not included in this 17 mill rate. Therefore, the 17 mills may be used wholly for running expenses, thus compelling the town or city to raise by additional taxes whatever sums may be needed to meet those charges.

"This Mr Taft frankly proclaims his 'pay-as-you-go' system. He has happily named it, for under it untimed sums can be raised and the tax spenders can go as far as they like. But when he assures us that a measure, which upon the face of it, promises the taxpayer with a two -mill increase is going to reduce taxation one wonders what kind of arithmetic they teach down in Cincinnati

"There is nothing like it except the widow's cruse and the famous dinner of the loaves and fishes. Indeed one is once again convinced that 'no good can come out of Nazareth.' There emerges a new prophet who assures us that if we

SCOTCH CITY IS TIED UP BY MOUSE IN POWER STATION

ABERDEEN, Oct. 27. — The old Scottish proverb that "one mickle makes a muckle" was amply confirmed when a mouse crept between two cables at the city's electric power station here.

The consequences of the mouse's escapade included the suspension of the streetcar services and electric lighting supply thru the breaking of the current, the power-station doors and machinery were wrecked, all elevators were stopped, and shipping was held up because the electrically operated swing bridge could not be worked.

SAYS "BUNNY HUG" BELONGS ON SOFA

Certainly Not Appropriate On Dance Floor, Asserts City Welfare Worker

MASON CITY, Ia., Oct. 27. — Marquis of Queensberry rules with strangle and other catch-as-catch can holds barred, must be employed to regulate dancing here, according to Miss Ardey Marshall, city welfare worker.

Miss Marshall has formulated a code of dancing regulations which will be enforced in Mason City during the coming season.

"The place for the bunny hug, the toddle, cheek-to-cheek dancing and the duck waddle is on the davenport—not the dancing floor," Miss Marshall asserted.

Girls, especially those of the "better families," are causing most of the unseemly dancing, according to the welfare worker. Some of the positions assumed in dancing are termed atrocious.

"Why these girls will permit their partners to hold them below the waist line, while they insist on a strangle hold on the young man is beyond me," Miss Marshall declared.

"Dancing is healthy, enjoyable exercise, but when two persons get out on the middle of the floor with suggestive music, in a tight hug and then just wiggle they aren't dancing."

Girls under eighteen and boys under sixteen years of age will be barred from public dance halls here this winter.

Lone Hawaiian Isle Scene of a Gripping Tale

Kalalau Valley Is Where Desperate Leper Defied Pursuers

NOW DESERTED

Lepers No Longer Consider Molokai As Prison, But Means to Cure

HONOLULU Hawaii, Oct 27—Kalalau Valley on the Island of Kauai made famous thirty years ago by the leper Koolau, who fought off the soldiers of the provisional government that came to take him to the settlement at Kalaupapa, Molokai is one of the most lonely and at the same time one of the most romantic spots in the Hawaiian Islands.

Persons who have read Jack London's "House of Pride" will recall the gripping tale of Koolau: of how this leper, refusing to give himself up as the other lepers had decided to do, fled with his wife and small son to the upper fastnesses of the valley and, with three rifles and a good supply of ammunition, kept guard over the narrow defile that was the only approach to the cave where they had taken refuge. One deputy sheriff and three soldiers who refused to take Koolau's showed warning not to attempt this ridge paid for their daring with their lives. Later a field piece was brought in and an attempt made to blow the hiding place to pieces, but without success. Finally the hunt was given up. Koolau remained in the valley, but died several years later of tuberculosis

Kalalau Valley faces the sea with a broad beach of yellow sand. Its sides are hemmed in by precipitous cliffs which rise thousands of feet into the rain clouds. The only means of entrance to the valley at the present time - the old Hawaiians knew a trail up the cliffs -is to anchor outside the breakers and "surf in" by small boats to the beach, or to take a narrow and dangerous footpath more than ten miles in length which follows the cliffs along the rocky Napali coast

The valley is wholly deserted of human inhabitants. Thirty years ago it held hundreds of Hawaiian families, and its wide area boasted a maze of taro patches, irrigated by water brought down from the heights by an ingenious system of ditches. Today the taro patches are overgrown with brush and woods, and the native fruit trees bananas and papalas have gone wild and scraggly. Wild goats roam the valley in hundreds, and at night wild dogs and cats, the remnants of former days, may be heard skulking about the campfire of the traveler who has ventured in from the outside world.

Close up against a cliff, hidden by the lantana bushes may still be found the ruins of an old grass hut, and nearby the rotted prow of an old hollow canoe.

But with this change which has come to Kalalau Valley there has come also a change in the manner with which lepers in the islands re-

HAMBURG IS AGAIN QUIET AFTER CONVULSION WHICH COST LIVES OF 64, FRIDAY

Seat of Violence Today Is Essen, Home of Krupp Plants—Optimism Increases With Apparent Collapse of Separatist Movement and Proposal of Conference On Reparations

BERLIN, Oct 27 — Quiet was restored in the Hamburg district today after fighting in which sixty-four persons were killed. The seat of violence was transferred from Hamburg to Essen when seven persons were killed in riots around the Krupp plant on Friday.

Relations between Berlin and Bavaria have improved and the situation in Saxony is well in hand.

The Rhineland secession movement appears to have collapsed as well as the autonomous movement in the Rhine Palatine. Open charges are made that the French assisted the separatists.

Satisfaction is expressed in government circles over the news that United States and Great Britain are working for an international conference to fix Germany's capacity for indemnity payments. Officials declare they are certain of a square deal from the British and Americans.

COLONEL FORBES DENIES THAT HE ACCEPTED BRIBE

Former Vets' Bureau Direcor Ill Following Breakdown

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27—Colonel Charles R. Forbes, former director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, today issued a sweeping denial of all charges of corruption and bribery brot against him during the senatorial investigation of his administration.

Appealing to the public to "withhold judgment" until he is able to present his defense, Colonel Forbes branded as "utterly and absolutely false" each specific charge of corruption made against him by Elias H Mortimer, of Philadelphia, in testifying before a senate committee investigating the veterans' bureau.

Speaking from a sick chamber, Forbes issued his statement to the International News Service. It was the first word from the accused official since Mortimer created a sensation at the senate hearing Wednesday by charging Forbes had entered a "profit sharing contract ring" to share profits on the construction of government hospitals, and had accepted a $5,000 "loan" from the witness

Forbes charged "the bribery" charge as false and "so absurd as to be ridiculous"

The former director's statement follows:

"I do not feel that I ought to make any statement in advance of the full and complete testimony which I shall give under oath on the witness stand

"However, I cannot refrain from saying that every charge and every word of testimony, especially that of Elias H Mortimer, reflecting on my personal or official integrity are utterly and absolutely false and without the slightest foundation

"The story of the receipt by me of a $5,000 bribe was not only false but so absurd as to be ridiculous. The only thing I ask of the public is to withhold judgment until my witnesses and I are heard and the full documentary evidence produced

"In reply to inquiries as to when I will testify I do not know as that is entirely within the discretion of the committee"

While Forbes was issuing his denial of the corruption charges, officials of the department of justice began the taking of evidence also to be submitted to the senate

CRICKETS INVADE KENTUCKY VILLAGE

Dickens Was Wrong About Sign of Good Luck, Say Housewives

DAYTON, Ky., Oct. 27. — The cricket on the hearth, ever since the time he was so ably press-agented by Charles Dickens, has been considered a sign of good luck for any family fireside which he might honor with his presence.

Not so, however, do the housewives of this Cincinnati suburb regard him. They assert with vehemence that he is distinctly bad luck

The reason? Thousands and tens of thousands, coming apparently from the city "dump," have invaded the homes of residents and driven them frantic with their chirping and brawling.

These particular crickets, gray in color and unusually large, are said to have chewed up much wearing apparel and many rugs. The are said to display an especial fondness for costly Oriental rugs, altho they themselves are distinctly American in origin. Various poisons have been scattered about for their consumption, but they refuse the death dose and eat other things.

City authorities have promised to take steps to eliminate them at their source "before election."

Study the Angry Man to Know Him

THE wise doctor paused to say, "You can't judge men when they are good-natured. You don't see the real man or the real mind then. You see only the 'adaptation to environment,' as Darwin might say, the color that we all put on to suit the crowd in which we live.

"But get a man angry; study him then, when he doesn't know it, and you get some real information. That probably is the origin of the saying, 'You can judge a man after you have played poker with him and watched him lose.'" That learned physician continued:

When I was working in the insane asylum we had to grade the patients, decide which were doing well and should be encouraged with more liberty, which were standing still mentally or going backward.

The simplest method was to do something that would make the patient angry, speaking to him roughly or giving an unreasonable order. When I had done the thing that I knew aroused temper, I would walk off, and without letting the patient know it, study his face.

Anger came, as I expected in every case. For anger and fear, which are the first emotions that human beings and other animals develop after birth, are the last emotions that they lose as the mind goes.

I would study my irritated maniac. His brow was contracted, his hands clenched. I would observe closely for a while. If, in a few minutes, I saw the anger pass away, signs of that and reason appear, the patient evidently explaining to himself that anger was not worth while if kept up indefinitely, I knew that my patient was on the road to recovery.

If, on the other hand, the storm of anger remained, if the patient nursed it, kept it alive, carried it along thru hours and perhaps thru the whole day and into the next, I knew that that patient was standing still or going back.

If you want to know men or women study them in a bad temper. Then the mind is turned outward so that you can see it."

What the doctor said about the study of his insane patients ought to interest all human beings, especially those that have power and are able, without fear of losing friends, money or position, to display ill nature. No matter how important they may be or think themselves, they may be quite certain that the longer the fit of temper lasts with them the weaker the mind is and the more in need of care.

Look out for yourself if you nurse ill temper, or the blues, or a fancied injury, with a tenderness that ought to be devoted only to a weanling child. The human mind is like rubber, when it loses its elasticity it is poor rubber and a weakened mind.

Roosevelt House

THEODORE ROOSEVELT was born sixty-five years ago today, October 27, 1858, in a brownstone house at 28 East 20th street, New York City. On October 27 of this year this house, restored in fireproofed material, is to be dedicated by the Women's Roosevelt Memorial Association as an enduring memorial, a museum of Americanism, a rallying place of the patriotic, a shrine of those who believe in the principles to which T. R. devoted his life.

Appropriate to the life it memorializes, Roosevelt House is designed to be a living, pulsating memorial. Not only is it a place which the patriotically reverent may visit, but a place of dynamic usefulness. Its library, rich with rare manuscripts and with all of the books written by or about Theodore Roosevelt and his times, is at the disposal of historians and students. One floor is given over entirely to a theatre or lecture room seating several hundred, equipped with motion picture projector and screen,—a hall for public meetings, for lectures on civic matters or for moving picture subjects on the life of Roosevelt. Cement vaults have been provided as a safe store house for all the Roosevelt film which can be gathered in, to be available for preparing historical pictures from authentic negative.

Spacious exhibition rooms provide a safe repository for all of the trophies, relics and memorabilia of Theodore Roosevelt's active, diversified life, collected since the Colonel's death by the Roosevelt Memorial Association. Spanish war relics, trophies of the hunt in many lands and of explorations furnish a variety of interesting objects. In the replica of the birthplace the student of American periods will find much of the original furnishings, pieces of historical interest, as well as other authentic details which give an accurate reproduction of the American home of ante-bellum days. These rooms in themselves constitute a lesson in American history.

Roosevelt House lives and breathes with the spirit of Theodore Roosevelt, as Mount Vernon and Monticello keep about them the aura of the famous men who lived in them. When Washington and Jefferson ended their public careers they retired to their homes and quietly awaited the end. Theodore Roosevelt died in harness, to the final moment in the midst of life and the tremendous affairs of one of the most notable periods in history. The house in which he was born and where he lived in the first two decades of his life stands on no isolated estate, it is the center of no lordly acres. The vital pulsing life which is New York swept up and surrounded the old brownstone house. Its physical appearance underwent changes. It was put to many uses. But never was it idle. Then the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Association, following Theodore Roosevelt's death on January 6, 1919, reclaimed and restored it, and gave it back to the nation.

Into his thirty-seven years of public life Theodore Roosevelt crowded more versatile service than perhaps any other historical personage. Assemblyman, Civil Service Commissioner, Police Commissioner, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, soldier, Governor of New York, Vice-President, President; historian, publicist, naturalist, man of letters, explorer, he gave unsparingly of his great ability. Altho he has passed on, his work endures, his ideals live. It is not too much to believe that his birthplace will be a shrine of the patriotic, ranking with Washington's.

As Calvin Coolidge said following the cornerstone laying of Roosevelt House

"Men build monuments above the graves of their heroes to mark the end of a great life, but women seek out the birthplace and build their shrine not where a great life had its ending, but where it had its beginning, seeking with a truer instinct the common source of things, not in that which is gone forever, but in that which they know will again be manifest."

ABE MARTIN On a Good Name

THRIVIN' ON A GOOD NAME

Th' first thing anybuddy should do after they git out o' school is t' begin t' build up a good name. If they kin work on it a little in th' evenin's while they're goin' t' school all th' better, but they should jump in' it in earnest th' minute they git ther diploma. A good name has been th' salvation o' thousan's, who thro' no fault o' ther own, have been overtaken by th' various vicissitudes that beset th' human race. There's allus some time in everbuddy's life when a good name comes in handy, a time when nothin' else could git 'em by. In affairs o' th' heart, in business, society, an' politics, an' even in raids, a good name is better than good clothes, or nerve, or th' best lawyer, or money, or a pull. Even if you don't amount t' anything your father's good name, or your mother's good name, it often pull you through. Most everthing else comes party easy after we once establish a good name. O' course we can't jest loaf around an' cash in on a good name as many are inclined t' do, an' it don't do t' flaunt a good name. A good name should be let alone an' it'll take care of its own publicity. A good established name makes a dandy trademark. In ever' community ther's folks that have inherited good family names, an' many o' them are jealously guardin' 'em an' keepin' up ole family traditions t' th' best o' ther ability. In ever' town an' city ther's prosperous concerns doin' business under ole reliable firm names, names o' men long dead, men who had built up enviable reputations by fair dealin' an' honest, useful lives. These ole firm names are valuable business assets, an' those that are usin' 'em realize that they must foller in th' footsteps o' ther honorable predecessors if ther business is t' grow an' prosper. We saw a sign one time across th' front of a fine, new fourteen-story business house that read, "Henry G. Baldwin's Son's Son Company." Ther wuz three Baldwin's all in a row that had good names, an' all had passed away, an' th' business wuz owned by a stock company that wuz breakin' its neck t' keep th' concern goin' so nobuddy would notice th' difference. So if a good name is a priceless asset in business it ought t' be purty helpful in all th' common transactions o' life. We kin tell that a good name is better'n riches by those who prefer th' riches.

gard the settlement at Molokai. No longer is it considered by them as a place of permanent imprisonment as in the days of Kalalau, but now rather as a great open-air hospital where those who come in the early stages of the disease have an excellent chance to regain their health.

This is a result of the splendid care which the Territorial Government gives the lepers at Molokai, good food, good houses and the wonderful chaulmoogra oil treatment which has worked such marvelous cures. Instead of hiding out as in the old days, the natives who find themselves afflicted with the disease report to the health authorities and ask for treatment. Besides being an excellent thing for the patient, this also works as a benefit to the community, where he comes, as it does away with the possibility of his friends and relatives contracting the disease from him.

Sixth St. Theatre

"THE UNWANTED CHILD"

Theatregoers especially the ladies are looking forward to the performance of the new drama of discussion, "The Unwanted Child," which plays at the 6th St. Theatre tonight.

From advance reports it is apparent that this new play, which is from the pen of Florence Edna May, dares to treat in a frank and interesting way with the subject of children born unwanted. When originally presented, its title and delicacy of the subject touched upon, raised quite a storm of protest from various quarters—mainly by folks who remembered the unsavory publicity attendant upon the propoganda as taught by various lecturers who have come amongst us. It is not a moving picture, but a modern drama enacted by a splendid company.

The authoress, Miss May, has evolved a story of sentimental interior leader for the Young Peoples terest, and one in which comedy as well as tragedy is portrayed

SOUSA'S BAND

Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture will be the opening number in all of the concerts given by Lieut Com. John Philip Sousa and his band this season. Sousa, who has characterized Wagner as the greatest composer the world has known, was the pioneer in the introduction of the Wagnerian music in the United States, altho that fact is not generally known.

"Wagner's music is full of the red blood of melodrama," Sousa said recently. "I have played it until it has become as popular over the country as selections from musical comedy. I played music from 'Parsifal' ten years before the opera was presented at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. If I were to set forth to educate a brand-new public in music, my text book would be Wagner. As a musical dramatist, he is easily the giant figure in the musical drama tists' group, and as the drama vivifies and condenses a story into an easily assimilated tabloid of time, so Wagner's works are the works for the missionary."

WHEN A PRESIDENT DIED AND A NEW ONE TOOK OFFICE

THE death of President Harding and the installation of Calvin Coolidge as his successor made an occasion at the beginning of August to test to its fullest the resources, coordination of bureaus, and speed in news transmission possible to a news organization.

Messages of congratulation from newspapers which receive its service and individual readers, from every section of this country, are still coming into the headquarters of INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE, praising the high quality of the service rendered unfailingly from the moment when President Harding's illness first took a serious turn until after his funeral and after President Coolidge was administering his great office.

Through the perfect work at every point of I.N.S. men "in the field" with the story, and the flawless handling of their despatches at all I.N.S. bureaus and divisional points, clients and readers everywhere were given an hour by hour review of events and happenings only possible as the result of vast and continuous experience and the perfect cooperating of units and parts built up through years into the finished working of a Great Newspaper Institution.

How Exercise Will Give Your Ankles Slender, Beautiful Lines

By LUCREZIA BORI

The Famous Spanish Prima Donna

THERE is some room for disagreement on the subject of attaining beautiful ankles.

Some women view their ungainly ankles with a sigh, shake their heads and become resigned, because they have been told that ankles which are not beautiful cannot be made so.

Now this attitude, due to misinformation, is most unfortunate. For alas! the woman who becomes resigned to certain unbeautiful aspects of her figure often becomes so thoroughly resigned that she simply feels she can't make the effort to try rigorous beauty measures.

She feels that if the results are to be uncertain anyway, she could not risk the discomfort of changing her easy method of being resigned and doing nothing.

Now, in the first place, the woman who admits this easy attitude of "Oh, let it go!" will miss many, many chances of recapturing fleeting points of beauty. Her more active sisters will go ahead and remould their chins and remake their ankles, while she is wondering whether or not the game is worth the candle.

Let me assure you the game of cultivating charm is always worth the candle and much more.

Ankles decidedly can be beautified.

Of course, you may not be able to remould your ankles to the exact measurements of ankles you have seen and admired, but you can take great strides in this direction.

There's a simple exercise which [illegible] on the back, heel up in the air.

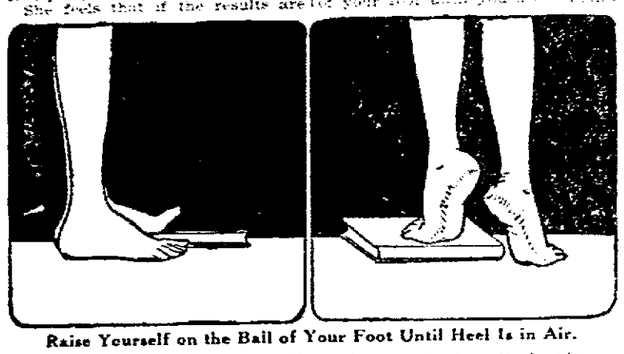
Gradually lower until your heel rests on the ground again.

Repeat this twelve or ten times with the right foot, then with the left foot, then with both feet.

You can fairly feel the muscles in your calves and ankles become toned and trained by this movement.

At first, raising your weight in this manner will be a strain upon your ankles, but don't feel discouraged. The rate at which they will pick up strength will be very rapid, and you'll feel encouraged because you know that as they become strong they become better toned, and your ankle becomes thinner.

Later on you may want to substitute a thicker volume for your first book. Watch your ankle as the back above the heel. The slender curve you want to see will begin to appear here first.



Raise Yourself on the Ball of Your Foot Until Heel Is in Air.

The Mistake Harriet Had Made.

HARRIET BRAITHWAITE looked at me with the strained attention of a conscientious pupil trying to grasp a problem in arithmetic. I saw that the hypothetical question I had put to her had caught her fancy and that she was pondering it.

"You mean," she said slowly, "that Edwin has no different admiration and liking for Katherine than he would have were she an equally valuable and faithful masculine assistant?"

"Not exactly," I replied honestly. "That is partly his reaction to her, but I think he also regards Katherine with the fatherly feeling that he gives all young girls. Did you see him with Marion tonight?"

Her anguished eyes answered me, and I hurried on.

"But, Harriet, I honestly believe, as I always have, that there is no shadow of reason for you to imagine he has any sentimental regard for Katherine. It is simply that she epitomizes to him——"

I stopped confusedly. I was getting into deep water. There were things which it would be an impertinence for me to tell to my sister-in-law, and I had pulled myself up on the brink of one of them.

"The daughter he never had!" she finished for me in a slow voice, but with lips pulled [illegible] "You need not hesitate to speak, Margaret. YOUR HEALTH

Every Child Should Have Quart of Milk Each Day

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.,

United States Senator from New York, Former Commissioner of Health, New York City.

TO-DAY I read the vivid story of a man who has just returned from a tour of Europe. He speaks about the children he saw over there. Listen to his words:

"The children! Innocent victims of the great catastrophe—all destined to carry the mark of suffering and stunted growth to their graves.

"We were met by about 300 little ones, children of the laboring man, as well as of the merchant and professional class. All were afflicted with rickets, heart disease or incipient tuberculosis. All of them showed the effects of lack of food to a high degree. The school physician told me of almost unbelievably small weights and sizes of children. I myself saw a sixteen year old boy only four feet six inches tall and weighing only fifty pounds!

"These dreadful effects of the war are the result of lack of food and, particularly, the lack of milk. That the report is not exaggerated I can verify, because last year I saw the ravages of such children in Central and Eastern Europe.

"Children cannot thrive without milk. When I see an intelligent parent who expects his child to develop into man or woman and then that child simply doesn't do it," I feel like producing a dreadful lecture to the unfaithful mother.

Like all the rest of us mortals, children must do a great many things they hate to do. You have to do them. I hate to. I hate to get up in the morning. Harry hates this nonsense on me. But I do get up in the morning, and you do some things you dislike doing. Take, for instance, the poor kiddies who don't like milk. Milk must be made palatable and forced to take it.

There is no substitute for milk. It contains the elements of body growth and brain growth. Scientists differ as to the existence of what have been called vitamines, but all agree that milk possesses the vitamines, or some other principles or elements which influence body growth. I always speak of the vitamines as the "soul of the milk." This soul dwells in the butter fat. Skim off the cream and you take away the soul. No better does the milk possess the qualities needed by the growing child.

Every child should have at least a quart of milk every day. Indeed, a lot of us believe a quart a day should be the average minimum ration of society. For children, a pint a day is the minimum milk consumption of the population. I should be glad to see the time when that quantity is doubled. I am sure it will make for better health and longer life.

But no matter what the adults do about milk, the children should have it all through the growing age. They talk to us all right until somebody says "milk is a baby's food." From that time the parents will have trouble, especially with the boys who don't want to be babies.

Every mother should find where good milk—milk free from danger and yet a milk rich in butter fats—she should find. I say, where this can be purchased and, no matter what it may cost, she should have a quart of it every day for her little children. That is the way to growth, good teeth, strong bones, strong muscles and good health. It is the opinion of the doctor, the dietitian and the undertaker.

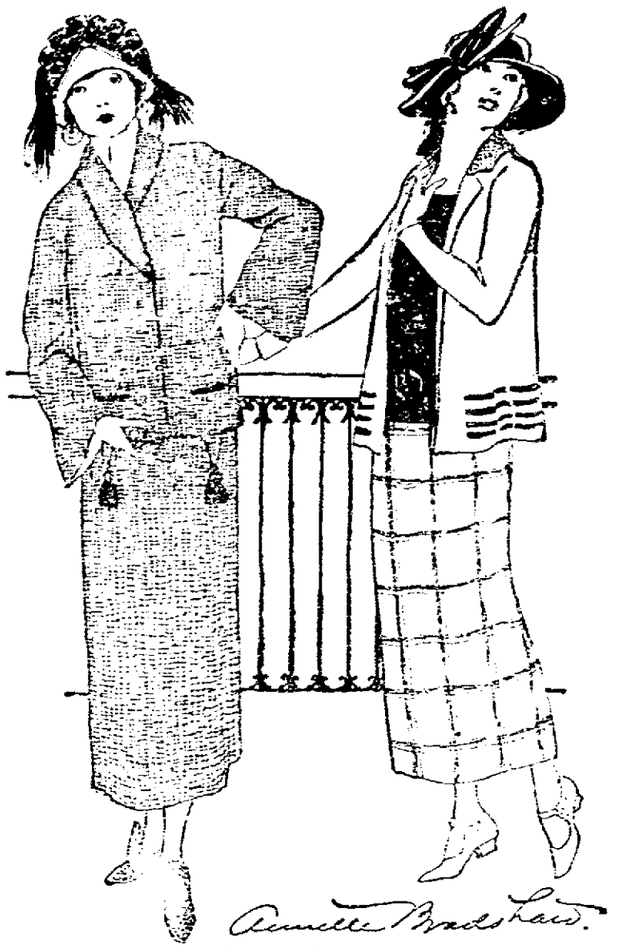
THE SHORT JACKET IS A NOVELTY



Brown Velvet Costume Shows Interesting Pocket Treatment.

Separate Jacket for Wear with Various Sports Costumes.

Proves Popular in Season When Long Coat Is the Vogue

By ANNETTE BRADSHAW

SINCE long coats and three-quarter coats are sponsored for the season, the ever-present short jacket comes under the head of a novelty jacket. It refuses to be thrust aside because of the prominence of other fashions, and it appears in most charming interpretations.

At the left we have a brown velvet suit consisting of plain straight skirt and short jacket. The original touch appears in the slit pockets which are finished so that the lining drops down below the edge of the jacket and ends in a gay little gold tassel. When the slit pocket opens wide enough for a pocket handkerchief to be thrust inside, we see that it is lined in cloth of gold.

At the right is a separate jacket made in a luscious shade of dark brown suede. The collar is closely stitched in threads of different colors, and narrow bands of the same stitching mark the edge of the jacket at the hips.

This jacket may be worn with any number of sports costumes. In this case the skirt is tan and brown camel's hair and the overblouse is pongee.

Suede hats, too, are very smart. Chic novelty jackets of suede often have suede hats to match.

WINIFRED BLACK WRITES ABOUT Love and the Seventh Year

Copyright, 1923, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

"AT the end of the seventh year," says the old French proverb, "the other woman arrives."

And the little woman who's dreadfully in love with her husband heard the proverb and she almost worried to death.

Her husband hasn't been the same lately, she says.

He seems to want to get away from her and to be alone—he takes long walks and sits up late nights reading, and in the morning when she wants to visit with him he always seems to be thinking about something else. And she cried and cried, and the more she cried the cooler he was.

Once he even laughed at her when she sobbed particularly hard, and then she thought of the French proverb.

"There," she said, "we've been married seven years and a half. The other woman has arrived. Who can she be?" And she stopped crying and began to quarrel.

And her husband is getting cooler and cooler, and she wishes she were dead and it really is rather terrible.

What Really Happens

And I don't believe the other woman has arrived at all. I think the seventh year has arrived and with the seventh year has come the change that must come to all married love, or single love, either, for that matter.

You cannot keep a flame at fever heat forever.

You cannot dwell always on the mountain top—not and be comfortable or sane and wholesome either.

The honeymoon raptures of the first year or two are gone. The deep, settled, devoted loyalty and calm friendship of the later years have not yet arrived and somebody is sure to feel that something is wrong—and it's almost always the woman.

The love season is the mating season and that does not last forever, fortunately for all concerned.

Romantic love is the little appetizer, the cocktail before the feast, and after that comes respect and confidence and companionship and the real comfort and real happiness of real marriage.

The little woman who's dreadfully in love with her husband is likely to lose all the best in life by snatching too forcibly to hold on to something that is going and that should go out of her life.

No man wants to live with a woman who hangs on his every word and watches his every expression. No man wants to be smothered with love and no man who is a man will stand the process.

I know of a woman who can never be in the room with her husband without hearing every word he says, no matter how big the room is or how many people are in it. She's conscious of him every instant and he's conscious that she's conscious, and you can fairly see him trying to take the bit out of his mouth and shake off the bridle.

She watches him not because she is jealous in the ordinary sense, but because she cannot bear to have him breathe without her consent. The other day his sister, no, it was his sister-in-law, bought the man some neckties—and the wife cried for hours because she could not bear to have anyone but herself give her husband anything. Poor, foolish, little thing. How long does she suppose any man of sense, or pride, or spirit will permit himself to be controlled like that?

Let Go Your Husband

Let go of your husband, little woman. Let him breathe, let him think, let him wonder and guess without you for a minute or two.

Don't try to tie him up in a net. You'll only make him struggle all the harder. "The same?" Of course he isn't the same. Nobody is the same for seven years, one year after another, or at least nobody should be.

Confidence, understanding—poof! Let the little blind god fly as far as he can. Open the window and give him a chance. He isn't worth a single thread to keep him tied at home. And, besides, being tied is the one thing he simply cannot and will not endure.

Think about something but Husband, little woman. Get interests of your own in life, read the newspapers, read a book once in a while, go to the movies, open your eyes and look around you, come back to earth and be a sane, normal human being and your sane, normal husband will be so grateful that he'll almost fall in love with you all over again. See if he doesn't.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27.

This should be an active and interesting day according to the dominant astral ruling, both by lunar aspect and aspect. Mars is favorably [illegible] and aggressive manifestations of the affairs, but the place of Mercury, under the affecting influence of the Moon, warns against carelessness in the handling of papers or writings and urges caution in the making of contracts or the signing of documents. The mind may be stimulated and the vision clarified or prophetic, owing to the high vibratory force of Mercury in aspect with Neptune.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a progressive year, with the mind and faculties turned in the direction of large and bold projects but they should be careful with letters and contracts. A child born on this day will be bold, enterprising and adventurous, and may have peculiar vision or insight in the management of its affairs. It may be psychic or highly impressionable.

Good Night Stories

WHAT THE MOSQUITO CHILDREN FOUND OUT.

ONE bright, beautiful morning the cluster of tiny eggs floating on the top of the rain-barrel opened, and one after another, a crowd of wee youngsters fell out head first in the water.

"My, goodness!" exclaimed one little fellow. "What a cool shower! I never dreamed that the world was like this or I would never have tried to break the egg."

"Yes, isn't it dreadful!" cried a second mosquito baby. "At first when I felt myself dropping, I thought I was drowning. What is this world made of, anyway?"

"Silly things," cried a much older mosquito. "This isn't the world at all. It's simply a rain-barrel which the family who live here have placed under this spout to catch rain water in. The world is made of dirt."

"You Have Seen the World."

"Then you have been out to investigate?" asked the first little fellow. "I should love to see the world."

"Is the world made of this stuff?" asked the wee girl mosquito.

"Such foolish children," snapped the oldest brother, feeling his importance. "Of course, I mustn't scold, for I came out the other day while you have just hatched out. Of course, I should know more of the world than you do."

"Gracious! then you must have seen the world," cried the first little mosquito. "Do tell us all about it."

By this time, the oldest mosquito began to feel very pleased with himself and he told his brothers and sisters all about the wonderful world they were soon to visit.

"It's all blue and green," he laughed. "Water, water, water everywhere, and everybody on the water has six legs and two feelers and many eyes. You will be welcomed everywhere you go because you are your mother's children."

He made the picture so exciting that the mosquito children could hardly wait until it was time for them to go out and visit the world.

But to their sorrow they found that the world was nothing like their older brother's description. Some of the folks that crawled on the ground did have six legs, but those that walked and flew only had two, and others who seemed to live in the barnyard had four legs.

They danced outside the screen doors and windows of the farmhouse, and remembering that their oldest brother had said folks would be glad to see them, when the door was left open the mosquito children all sailed into the house.

They soon found out they were not welcome. The odor that scented up the place choked them and they were glad to get out into the night again.

They never saw their big brother again. I guess when he really did get out into the world and found it was nothing like what he had told his brothers and sisters, he flied away and hid.

LISTLESS O. S. U. TEAM TO MEET HEAVIER HAWKEYES; NOT OVER MICH. DRUBBING

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 27—Ohio State and Iowa, each smarting under the sting of defeats by Western conference football teams, meet each other for the first big ten game of the year in the Ohio Stadium, when they clash at 2 p. m.

The Hawkeyes are a big, rangy outfit, outweighing the Buckeyes 15 pounds to the man. The center of their line is green, and with two regulars probably out of the line-up with injuries, Half-backs Parkin and Capt. Miller, their offensive strength is somewhat weakened.

What Ohio State will do, and can do, is an open question. Following an overwhelming 23-0 drubbing by Michigan last Saturday, the Buckeyes in practice this week have not "snapped out of it," but presented a listless, disorganized squad to Coach Wilce. "This group embodies more native football ability than any Ohio State team in years. But it has not been hitting on all six," Coach Wilce declared.

Ohio State fans, more than 40,000 of them who will attend the game, are hoping the football machine will get warmed up and do its stuff today.

Probable line-ups:

Ohio State	Pos	Iowa
Seiffer	L E	Otte
Oberlin	L T	Hancock
Steel	L G	Fleckenstein
Young	C	Giffen
Schulist	R G	Olsen
Petcoff	R T	Kriz
Wilson	R T	Romey
Judy	Q B	Fry
Snyder	L H	Fisher
Workman	R H	Graham

EAST'S INTEREST CENTERS ON NAVY-PRINCETON CLASH; GOBS HAVE BETTER ELEVEN

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 27—Second runners, both in the last start under colors, Princeto nand the Navy will meet this afternoon on a local gridiron in what, nevertheless will be one of the big moments of the eastern season. No Princeton-Navy duel could be otherwise, even if they never had won a game since London went British.

Simultaneous with the defeat of Princeton by Notre Dame last week the Navy was finishing an indifferent second to Penn State; yet the country over will watch the outcome of this game with more than casual interest. So much for prestige.

It is the third meeting between two natural rivals and the situation now stands one-all in victories and fifty-fifty in mutual antagonism. These worthies like to die with their cheers on and they usually do. Quite a quantity of bad blood has been spilled as a result of the two former meetings.

This was first at Princeton in 1920, a great Tiger team winning by two touchdowns and an ending to Navy men, was none too gentle about the matter. In consequence the opening whistle at Annapolis the following year was still an echo when Princeton player was banished for alleged slugging and his team penalized half the distance to its goal line. Princeton has never ceased to maintain that a middie was equally guilty with the cuss! Tiger. The penalty was a forerunner of the first Navy touchdown and ultimately a Navy victory.

Local sentiment is all in favor of the Navy not only of the proximity of the academy. It is an opinion amounting almost to a conviction hereabout that the Navy is the better team and will prove it. Princeton is believed to be hardly typical of the eleven of other years. It is weak defensively and seems to lack punch on attack.

It was learned Forbes will substantiate his personal denial of Mortimer's charges of graft and corruption by a mass of documentary evidence and by the direct testimony of other men implicated.

Forbes, who is described as "a very sick man," is in seclusion here under the orders of his physician. He suffered a partial collapse Monday evening following his dramatic appearance at the opening session of the senate investigation. The former director, afflicted with heart trouble, became greatly excited during the hearing, and this condition brot a breakdown later as he had just completed a 3,000 mile trip from his home in Seattle to attend the hearings.

whole project. No less a distinguished student in international affairs than David Lloyd George has termed the reparations commission a political organization. The fear consequently exists that politics will play a part in the proposed scientific commission.

Secretary Hughes and David Lloyd George had a long conference here last night.

The size of the commission and the identity of the American members were subjects of wide speculation today but until the reparations commission indicates the general outline little can be accomplished. The American experts will be suggested by the state department, subject, however, to the approval of the commission.

It is assumed that the commission will not O. K. any American financiers who have expressed opinions on the amount of reparations Germany should pay that are at variance with the commission's ideas.

GRAIN GROWERS AIDED BY FEDERAL WAREHOUSE ACT

There has been, during recent months, considerable misunderstanding and confusion in the minds of farmers in some sections concerning the federal and state acts referring to the warehousing of wheat. As a result, Gray Silver, American Farm Bureau Federation representative at Washington, D. C. wrote Secretary Henry C. Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, for a definite explanation of the acts. Mr. Wallace's reply in part is given here:

"I have your letter in which you suggest with reference to the warehousing of wheat that perhaps there is something the state and county farm bureaus can do which has not yet been called to their attention.

"I think the farm bureau and other national farm organizatins can render a service to their members by making clear just what it is necessary to do to take advantage of the federal and state laws governing the warehousing of wheat.

"We have a United States warehouse act, passed by congress, and a number of state warehouse acts. The federal act as administered under the federal act are licensed by the department of agriculture. The department, however, has nothing to do with administration of state warehouse acts. Rules for grain warehousing under the federal act were promulgated by the department in October, 1919, almost four years ago, and are still in force, as the department has nothing to do with the duty of drafting rules for their operation. Inaccurate statements concerning this matter may have operated to delay the organization of warehouses under the state acts.

"One false rumor is that individual farm cribs and granaries can be licensed by the department as warehouses when they are used solely for storing the grain of the farmer who owns them. The federal law provides only for licensing persons or corporations engaged in the business of storing agricultural products.

"The way by which farm cribs and granaries might be brot under the federal system is for groups of farmers in a community to organize a corporation for the purpose of warehousing farm products. The corporation might then either buy or lease the granaries and cribs on the individual farms, and could then apply to be licensed as a warehouse corporation under the federal act. It is important, however, that farmers who contemplated doing anything of this kind should read the law.

"The work of organizing warehouse companies is not a thing the department of agriculture or any other government agency can do properly. That must be done by the farmers themselves. Officers of the farm organizations could help very much if they would make a careful study of the federal warehouse act and the various state acts and then work out definite plans and forms for organization of local warehouse companies, seeing to it that those conform to federal and state laws.

"The number of warehouses under the federal act is increasing rapidly. Confidence in warehouse receipts issued by such federal warehouses has been established thru the representations of this department. Federal financial institutions, and banking institutions thruout the country, accept these receipts as collateral. The result is that farmers who believe they are justified in holding their grain for higher prices find that by warehousing it under the federal system they have no trouble in borrowing the money needed to carry it. Everyone will realize the importance of maintaining the high integrity of these warehouse receipts, both for the purpose of being able to borrow on them and to get the money at the lowest possible interest rate.

"Right now," Knight asserted, "every politician in the state is lined up for these two bills" and continued:

"The old special interest serving Republican organization feels called upon to get into the fight, as usual for the wrong thing, while the Democrats are not raising a finger to aid the people.

"Gov. Donahey, who rightly vetoed the bills, promised his valiant support. He was going to get petitions and he was going to make speeches. He has not a name on any petitions and he has not opened his mouth on this subject. He is too busy now chasing demon rum to think of the burdens of the overtaxed people.

"Indeed, both parties are exactly alike in all such cases as this. They do not want taxes reduced and if any relief is to come, it can be only thru the people using the ballot to kill just such measures as these two bills."

"The day when the girl studying housekeeping was beneath other students in the university is past. At least as far as Syracuse is concerned. Scholastic requirements in the College of Home Economics are the same as for the College of Liberal Arts. It was made so to keep the standard of work high and so eliminate any idea that 'Home Ec' is a 'pipe course.'

"Girls not only learn how and what to cook, but they learn how to dress and make their own clothes, so that from this angle alone the course in Home Economics is a good economic investment."

sailles Treaty of which there has not been an equal or even similar pact in the world's history."

The food and coal, unemployment and money situations, he said, are the danger points in Germany.

"Altho the quality of this year's German grain crop exceeds the bad harvest of last year," he said, "Germany has to import grain for at least one month and a half. The great difficulty for the Germans is how to finance this import. The other question is how to induce the German farmer to deliver his grain when there is no real money to pay him for it.

"There will be a shortage of coal in almost every part of Germany. If the winter should be a strong one, many families will die of freezing."

German money, Dr. Wiedfeldt said despairingly has fallen so low in the value and estimation of the people that the bartering of savagery has been resorted to. He added that the German government is considering many proposals to stabilize currency.

He voiced his appreciation of American relief work in Germany which, "has saved thousands of women and children who would otherwise lie under the ground."

Wiedfeldt was accompanied to this country by Hugo Stinnes, son of the foremost financier of Germany.

THEATRE TAX FIGHT ENDS IN DUEL

Cora Laparcerie

The Duke de Camastra and Jacques Richepin, French poet and playwright, have fought a duel near Paris as the result of an argument over a theatre admission tax. The Duke was handed a ticket by a friend and tried to get into the Laparcerie Theatre. M. Richepin, husband of Mme. Cora Laparcerie, who now manages the theatre, asked the Duke to pay a state tax on his "Annie Oakley." The Duke, refusing to pay, abused M. Richepin, who struck the nobleman. The duel followed.

X Appeal to Fathers and Mothers X

The fathers and mothers of our city have a keen interest in the welfare of their children, and want to know and have an assurance that their home city conditions are kept up to the highest possible standard.

No father or mother wants to see our city slip back into a condition where liquor violators are going to be left to operate unmolested thereby aking the risk of having their children come in contact with this element.

Therefore we earnestly ask your support at the polls for W. S. Tish, the Wage Earners' Candidate for re-election. Why take a chance when you can have a man that has kept your city clean and will continue to do so?
